3.) The specific heat of a solution is 4.18J/(g°C °) and its density is 1.02g/mL. The solution is formed by combing 25.0mL of solution A with 25.0mL of solution B, with each solution initially at 21.4 °C. The final temperate of the combined solutions is 25.3 °C. Calculate the heat of reaction, q rxn, assuming no heat loss to the calorimeter.

The graph provides for a visual representation of the data in a clearer and more concise way. Patterns can be easily distinguished from a graph, rather from a table. In this lab, the graphs were able to let us, see the change in temperature of the solutions over a time span, and made predicting a pattern a lot easier.

The laws of thermodynamics are a set of mathematical functions, which govern all forms of energy and their inter-conversion. The zeroth law of thermodynamics is concerned with temperature equilibrium; it states that heat always flows from a hot to a cold body. The first law of thermodynamics describes the conservation of energy.

The following data are from a laboratory experiment that examines the relationship between solubility and thermodynamics. In this experiment $\text{KNO}_3(\text{s})$ is placed in a test tube containing some water. The solution is heated until all the $\text{KNO}_3(\text{s})$ is dissolved and then allowed to cool. The temperature at which crystals appear is then measured. From this experiment we can determine the equilibrium ...
